

A Maharashtrian Woman

This girl from Maharashtra wears a family heirloom—the patibani sarsa—of a very striking and specialised hand-weave, which had in fact almost died out as a technique but has now been revived with government subsidies. The jewellery consists of a high collar chinch peti, gold squares set in pearl strands; the mangalutra, necklace of black beads with a gold and pearl pendant, and significant of marriage; and the nose ornament, nath, the shape and design of which is typically Maharashtrian and is worn by the bride of each generation.
